

Bio

Ryan McCoy (American, b. 1974) is an artist based in Washington DC. He works in various media but is mainly known for his large iconic paintings in which he structures meaning through specific materials to create personal iconographies about time, place, and memory. His work has been exhibited nationally and internationally, and is included in numerous private collections throughout North America, South America, Europe, and Australia. He earned his MFA and BFA from George Mason University and teaches at various schools in the Washington DC metro area. In 2016 he began a six-year studio residency at Arlington Arts Center and is currently represented by Long View Gallery in Washington, DC.
