

Art and design in varied forms have always been a strong interest in my life.

I began my career as a muralist and trompe l'oeil painter for about 20 years doing many commercial and residential installations throughout New England. Eventually I changed my focus to landscape painting in oil as my work as a muralist became increasingly detailed and I discovered a more satisfying intimate scale for my work. It was in my exploration of landscape painting where I discovered a love of aluminum and copper as a substrate. The ultra smooth surface highlights brushstrokes and texture while adding an ethereal quality to my work. The depth and light of the reflective surface adds a wonderful dimension to my paintings.

Most of the inspiration for my work comes from the marshes and woodlands in the Northeast, particularly those along the Connecticut shoreline. The beautiful marshes, rivers and the LI Sound are a consistent theme in my work. I often begin my painting en plein air and then complete them in my studio in order to ensure a strong composition and can more effectively explore the effect of light and time of day on the landscape. As mentioned above, the use of aluminum and copper as a substrate enhance the ability to capture light. Some of my work is also created through imagination using fragments of photos and memories to create a compelling composition.

In addition to my gallery work, I also work with both public and private clients on commission pieces. One of my more prominent clients has been the Yale-New Haven Hospital network. There are currently 17 of my paintings in their private collection, dispersed throughout facilities in Fairfield and New Haven Counties. This includes 5 large pieces at the Y-NH Old Saybrook Medical Center and a large installation at Stamford Hospital. My work seems to have a particular appeal in hospital settings due the sense of tranquility and quiet they convey.

Other commissioned work of note would include several paintings at the Campbell's Soup Company headquarters in Camden NJ, as well as inclusion in the permanent collections of the UConn Health System, Goodwin College and several important private collections.
